'J. H.' and 'Sandy' Are Said to Re Planning American Trip.

WILL COMPETE IN OPEN

With Braid and Vardon Would Carry Colors of Britain at Skokie.

By KERR N. PETRIE.

With the names of Harry Vardon, James Braid, J. H. Taylor and Sandy Herd all presented as those of potential invaders the golf season of 1922 holds out more promise of white hot action than any that America yet has known. It might have been thought that with two such players as Braid and Vardon in the field for American exhibitions all others would immediately pull down their colors. A well known amateur said the other day, however, that it would greatly surprise him if J. H. Taylor were not seen in the national open champlonship at Skokie, and as it has been given out from a usually well open championship at Skokie, and as it has been given out from a usually well informed British source that J. H. and Herd are seriously contemplating a trip together to the United States the pros-pect seems extremely bright for the simultaneous appearance of the four veterans.

Of the quartet only Braid has not already visited the United States. Vardon won the open championship in 1906, returned to finish in a triple tie for the honors in 1913, and then rain second to Francis Ouimet in the playoff. Eack last year, he was one of four tying for second at Toledo.

Taylor in 1900 was runnerup in the American open championship to Varerican open championship to Var-b. Unlike Harry, he has contented uself with remaining at home ever since.

As for Herd's visit, that was made sway back in 1306 on the occasion of a big open tournament held by the American Club in Mexico City to which the late Willie Smith was attached as professional. Andrew Kirkaldy, Roland Jones and other British professionals were along, but they left the major part of the purse in the hands of Smith.

Although one of the oldest of the old guard, Herd still has lots of grand golf in him, as was disclosed by his play in the last two British open championships. Last year he was runnerup to Duncan. This year he was tied for the lead at an advanced stage of the tournament.

Chris J. Dunphy, the well known ama Chris J. Dunphy, the well known amateur who is soon to leave for Palm Beach, where he has charge of the Palm Beach, where he has charge of the Palm Beach Country Club, is at the head of a syndicate that has taken over the Jamaica Country Club links. The idea, according to Dunphy, is to provide golf at a moderate cost. He thinks the days have gone by when excessive dues will be charged for playing the game, and the purpose of the syndicate will be to supply a first class link at a moderate cost. Dues for the new club will be only $100 a year and nonassessable.

Devereux Emmet has been engaged to add another nine holes to the present layout, but in making the new course the old nine will also be in-proved greaths. A new $50,000 clubhouse will be constructed on the property, but not near the present building.

The new organization will be known as the Hillcrest Country Club, the membership of which will be 400. A number of applications are already in.

In Defending Alliance Billy Gibson Says Champion Bars Only Rickard.

By CHARLES F. MATHISON.

William Gibson, president of the Na tional Sports Alliance, in a defense of his attitude toward the Walker law and Madison Square Garden writes as

It seems queer that the father of the law should be hostile to it, does it not? Another thing, Leo P. Flynn, Promotor Rickard's personal adviser at the Madison Square Garden, not only is a member of the organization, but is on the board of directors. Tex Rickard was invited to join the alliance and occupy a position of its advisory committee, but he refused.

"The National Sports Alliance was founded because it was believed that such an organization would work great good for boxing. No one thought of using it as a weapon in a fight against the Walker law or Tex Rickard. A place is open for Rickard in the alliance and the father of the Walker law is one of the hardest workers for it.

"Now, as manager of Benny Leonard, I want to say that I will never have anything to do with Tex Rickard. My reasons are my own, but, believe me, they are sufficient. There are a couple of other promoters in the country who will never make a penny through Benny Leonard.

Had Rickard sought this match he could not have made it, for we were at the time decidedly unfriendly. Benny Leonard may at some future date again box in the Garden, but it will be because the bout is being staged for some charity, as in the Mitchell and Ward bouts. He will most assuredly never box there under the direction of Tex Rickard. A minor league club can call itself a major league club, but that doesn't make it so. If a major league baseball player gets caught with a minor league club there should be some way in which he has a chance to get away and join the company to which his skill entitles him.

The reasons that none of the lesser circuits could become a major league are many. They are in cities that would not support a big league salary list. If a couple of them were able to do this the others couldn't, and they would have a one or two club circuit.

But the main reason is that there are not enough major league players to go around now. Even in the big leagues they are spread pretty thin in places. If there were plenty of big league players in the minors a major league club wouldn't be paying $75,000 for an untried youngster.

We always have thought of an "all star" eleven as a mythical organiza tion. It would appear that we were wrong. Louis T. Moore of Wilmington sends us a clipping from a newspaper, in which, after announcing that ten sends us a clipping from a newspaper, in which, after announcing that David B. Jacobi of the University of North Carolina has been selected as center on an all State team, the reporter goes on to say: "Jacobi has played on this 'all star' team before, and in the games he maintained the splendid record made while playing with the university aggregation." We wish we could have seen those games. It always has been our dearest ambition to see

After all, the most rabid rooter must admit that the trade winds blow in the winter time. That was quite a trade the Yankees made.
